

Media exposure by national identity

Media exposure by unification–independence position

Selective exposure in Taiwan runs along the identity cleavage rather than an ideological one. Outlet alignment follows Hsiao (2006) and Lo, Wang and Hou (2007); it is sharper and more stable than the US Left/Right coding, which the original paper conceded was coarse.