

Directed acyclic graph: Taiwan specification

Identity and Tondy are inserted between demographics and political behaviour

Departure from the US specification of Ho and Glendenning (2026). Ethnicity is absent from the Taiwanese instrument and its role is absorbed by Identity. Following Achen and Wang (2017), national identity is modeled as causally prior to cross-Strait policy preference, and together they form the China factor: the organizing variable through which demographic position translates into media choice and vote choice.
